Many attempts have been made to apply the motive power obtained from electricity to the working of locomotives, but no satisfactory result was obtained. However, a step forward has been made in this direction in Berlin with apparent success. There are two lines of rails laid down, which, as is a narrow gauge line, return into themselves in a ring shaped curre. The length is about 300 metres. In the mid-dle is an isolated third line, consisting of an upright continuous iron plate.

The locometive carries two rollers, with which it stands in connection with the isolated middle line. The essential portion of the loopnotive is formed by an electro dynamical maobine, one pole of which is connected with the middle line, and the other with the pair of outer rails, through the outer wheels. Simiarly the machine which produces the current stands in the machine room in connection through one pote with the middle line and rails. When, therefore, the dynamical machine in the locamotive is on the railway, the electric current produced in the machine soon runs through it and excess it to rotate and to impart its rotary motion to the wheels of the locomo he damp carth. It the current is interrupted, the damp ground is not a sufficient con-inctor to keep the dynamo-electrical action going. The magnetism of the machines profusing the current consequently disappears, and the result is that the subordinate stream brough the earth is also interrupted, mission of electric force, from the fact that the locemotive, whether moving slowly or quickly, always works up to its full power-an effect which has hitherto been an unsolved problem When the machine that gives the power has increase is strength to a similar extent. By this means the electro magnetism and, corres ponding to this, the attractive power of the machine are increased. The dynamo'electric loco notive has the farther advantage that is carries in itself the power which can be employed as a brake, io rap dy than the se ual machine. and all three are drawn in from one to two mioutes round the circular railway, 300 metres in length. The locomotive was originally made for the oult to decide. Apart from the question of the possibility of a sufficient isolation, it depends on the conductive resistance of the rails. According to D:. Stemen's views, this requisite on long railways may be par ly satisfied by setting up from time to time new primary dynamo-olectrio michines, which would maintain the necessary electric tension between the middle and the

The custom heretofore has been to per mit postal employees to change the address apon misdirected letters but this has been found a hindrance, the authorities say, rather than a help in forward og mail matter to its proper destipation. There are now about 42 000 postoffices, and fully three times that number of places that have iccal names, but are no postoffices. Many thousands of letters are addressed to such points and it has been the enseom to allow postal exployees to re direc; them the post office nearest the locality addressed; but this is now forbidden, and persons must be careful to ascertain that subscriber. A Morta age, -In the whole range of sacred and profane interature, perhaps, there is nothing recorded which has such staying qualities as a good healthy mortgage. A mortgage can ba depended upon to stick closer than a brother. It has a mission to perform which never lets up. Day after day it is right there, nor does the alightest tandency to slumber impair its vigor in the night. Night and day, on the S.bbath and at boilday times, without a moment's time for rest and recreation, the bister offspring of its existance, interest goes oo. The seasons may change, days run into weeks weeks into months, and months may be swallowed up in the gray mist of advancing years, but that mortgage stands up in sleepiess vigilan e, with the interst a perennial stream, a ceaseless slumberer, the unpaid mortgage rears up it: gaunt froat in perpetual terment to the miserable wight who is held in its pitiess clutch 1t.ho.d., to poor victims with the relentless grasp of a grant; not one hour of recreation, not a moment's evasion of its hideous presence. A genial asyage of modifying aspect while the interact is paid, a very devil of nopeless destruction when the payment fails.
